

Maneki Neko

Made in Japan.

From ancient folklore, many stories have been told about the Lucky Cat, known as "maneki neko" in Japan. It's a "beckoning cat," welcoming good luck and fortune for the home and prosperity to the business. This ceramic talisman is often seen in the front of houses, businesses and store windows.

The white cat stands for purity and happiness. The black one is meant to ward off evil spirits and keep the owner in good health. The gold cat brings wealth and riches. The cat with its left paw up welcomes customers in and is placed in the front of the business by the entrance. If the cat is a gift for a grand-opening, for instance, then it makes better sense to give the cat with its left paw up first. As sales go up, then the business can look forward to prosperity. A cat with its right hand raised symbolizes prosperity and stands in the back of the business for the owner, whose office was usually in the back.

The history of the maneki neko dates back during the Edo period in Japan (17th century to mid-19th century). One legend tells of a wealthy man who stood under a tree next to a temple during a thundering rainstorm. A cat was beckoning to him, so the man followed the cat inside the temple. Suddenly, lightning struck the tree. The man was so grateful because the cat saved his life. The cat became a benefactor of the temple and brought it much prosperity. When the cat passed away, a statue was made in its honor.

Now it is your good fortune to own a Lucky Cat! We wish it will bring many years of happiness, good fortune and prosperity for you, your family and business!
